LEGAL SERVICES

Text:

Lawyers, the saying goes, are information-hungry and time-starved. Which would explain the stack of reading material teetering next to Carl D. Poplar's desk.

"You fall behind," admits the Turnersville trial lawyer.

It's no wonder.

With new laws being created every day - by legislators and by judges rendering opinions in cases - the demands of keeping up never let up.

Legal journals pour into lawyers' offices and pile up on their credenzas, along with a bewildering array of newsletters and magazines and the daily mail.

Summer is the worst.

"It's a war in August," Poplar says. "You get a flurry of (court) opinions in July and August."

A lawyer not knowing the law would be like a baserunner not knowing how many outs there are: It could cost him the game.

Poplar, though, has found a new way to stay on top of things.

A year ago, in his stack of mail, he came across a brochure for a product called Lawcast, a news service on audiocassette for New Jersey lawyers.

Poplar, who spends a lot of time in his Cadillac driving between the office, the courthouse and client meetings, figured he'd pop Lawcast in his tape player and give it a try.

It wasn't boring.

And that was a surprise, since Poplar had listened to plenty of tape-recorded legal seminars that made his eyes glaze over. Lawcast, he says, was different - like a radio show for lawyers, complete with anchors, interviews, sound bites, headline newsreaders and musical segues.

A year later, he's still subscribing and requiring the other lawyers at Poplar & Eastlack to listen to the tapes, too. They receive a 60- to 90-minute tape every two weeks.

"I feel better informed," he said.

That's just the reaction Jason B. Meyer, Lawcast's inventor, had counted on.

The inspiration for Lawcast evolved during Meyer's 40-minute commute to his law office.

"I listened to a lot of all-news radio and a lot of NPR," said Meyer, 37, "but I was having trouble keeping up with my reading."

And then the former broadcaster had a thought: What if you presented legal news in a format like National Public Radio's Morning Edition and All Things Considered?

With audio, lawyers could listen while they commuted, walked the dog, jogged, rode the exercise bike, or waited for the kids in the parking lot at the library.

"Even computers - no matter how good they get, you can't use them in the car," said Meyer, of Pennington. "You can't use them as you walk."

By the time Meyer left his law firm to start Lawcast, he had a much shorter commute: In January 1994, he resigned as an associate in the Princeton office of Dechert Price & Rhoads, the Philadelphia law firm. He and his wife, Tracy Wurzbach Meyer, 34, formed Vox Juris Inc. (the voice of the law) with capital from private investors.

Their first edition of New Jersey Lawcast was ready that May, and they introduced it through ads, direct mail and booths at legal events. Lawyers subscribe as they would to a newsletter and receive a tape every other week, accompanied by an outline, for $329 a year.

The challenge is to make the tapes interesting, given that legal reading can be dry as dust. The Pelican Brief it's not.

The meatiest part of Lawcast is CaseReel, in which two anchors - including Meyer - trade off talking about recent court decisions. The digest is interspersed with legislative news, features on topics such as tort reform, reports from Lawcast's Washington bureau, a calendar of events, and general legal scuttlebutt.

"Almost all of our reporters are lawyers," Meyer said. "When it comes to interpreting cases, you need a lawyer with practical experience."

Lawcast started with four full-time employees, including the Meyers, and it now has 10. It employs 10 to 15 freelancers.

"We do all of our own recording, sound editing, tape duplication and subscriber fulfillment," Meyer said in an interview from the company's office-studio in Pennington, N.J.

Poplar, the Turnersville litigator, doesn't just listen to Lawcast, he analyzes it.

He thinks the dialogue among anchors and correspondents "keeps you focused."

And the way the case digests are interspersed with soft news aids absorption. "If they just did CaseReel after CaseReel, you'd lose it," Poplar said. "The features let the mind relax, then you get back to CaseReel."

D. William Subin, a Northfield, N.J., courtroom lawyer, is too busy reading trial transcripts to listen to Lawcast on the exercise bike. He tunes in from the driver's seat of his Audi.

For him, Lawcast's pledge to be comprehensive is a safety net: He knows he will hear about every decision that affects his practice. "I can't read through every case that comes out through every court," he said. ~~A subscriber service line helps~~ lawyers get copies of materials referred to on the tapes.

Meyer won't divulge the number of subscribers, but estimates that with tapes being passed around law offices, there are 1,000 listeners.

"It's growing, and it's growing well," he said.

In October, the Meyers added a Lawcast for in-house lawyers at corporations. This month, they will introduce Lawcast for intellectual-property lawyers, and next month an edition for employment and labor specialists.

"We'd very much like to do Pennsylvania," Meyer said. "Our plan is to expand the product."

With 50 states, and myriad legal specialties, the growth potential is attractive.

"We're in this for keeps, to become a national legal publishing company," said Meyer, a 1985 graduate of Penn Law School. "I hope that this will turn out to be more lucrative than the law practice."

LawCast."

News and information on the tapes are delivered "radio-style" in a newscast format. Publisher Jason Meyer said that LawCast is the first legal news service that "you don't have to read" and is "the first realistic answer to Just having too much to read and too much information to process."

Twice a month, subscribers receive a tape and a printed outline. Each tape is produced like a radio news show for lawyers, with anchors, reporters, commentators, headlines, digests of opinions in the applicable state and federal courts, and digests of legal stories from both the legal and lay media. Each edition's printed outline summarizes and cites every case, story and authority mentioned on tape.

Vox Juris said that "Corporate Counsel LawCast" reports on national legal developments for in-house counsel. "Intellectual Property LawCast" covers patents, trademarks, copyrights, licensing, trade secrets and related topics for intellectual property professionals. "Employment and Labor LawCast" covers employment legislation and regulation, rules and caselaw at the state and federal levels. "New Jersey LawCast" covers new caselaw, legislation, rules, regulations, notices to the bar and "topical" legal news from New Jersey.

Meyer said that editorial content focuses on "substantive legal developments" and analyzes how those developments "can affect a lawyer's practice." Subscribers hear experts, lawmakers and their colleagues "share their experiences and expertise."

Vox Juris also publishes "Quarterly Reports for New Jersey" in each of four specialties: tort and personal injury, family law, criminal law, and employment and labor law.
